Koriann and Rich grew up in the same town and became friends in 2000. After about a year of having a very close friendship, the two took their relationship to the next level and began dating in November 2001. Five years later, Rich took Koriann shopping on her birthday and made a stop at a jewelry store. He allowed her to pick out the perfect engagement ring, just for fun. About a month later, Koriann grew suspicious that Rich was going to pop the question. "He took me out of one of my evening college classes and we went to dinner," says Koriann. "I was sure it was going to happen that night." In spite of Rich's nervous behavior, he did not ask Koriann to marry him during dinner. Later that night, Rich suggested that Koriann come over to his house to watch a movie, and she agreed. Walking into his house, Koriann noticed that the dining room was decorated with candles, rose petals, balloons and champagne. "It took me a minute to realize, but my family and all of our close friends were there as well," says Koriann. When she looked over at Rich for an explanation, he was down on one knee with a diamond ring in his hand. She immediately started to cry. "I can't remember to this day if I actually said yes before hugging and kissing him and putting on the ring," recalls Koriann.
